Sermons on What to Preach and the Manner of Saving Souls-Devotional Meetings Well Attended-Various Matters Detailed.

BETHANY PARK.

A Lecture on the American Problem and Sermon on Preaching. Bethany Assembly is about at its best, and people recognizing that fact are increasing the number of cottages. The managers, however, understand how to accommodate the visitors, even though they are hastily forced to construct additional quarters. All, too, seem to enjoy the outing, where they receive religious instruction, with now and then an excellent lecture on some secular or literary topic. The regular religious meetings are well attended, and from none is more benefit derived by the devout than the early morning prayer service. The Rev. J. O. Cults, of Michigan, conducted it yesterday morning, and so large was the crowd it was thought best to hold the service hereafter in the tabernacle. At 9 o'clock a hereafter in the tabernacle. At 9 o'clock a meeting of the faculty, alumni and friends of Butler University took place. It was presided over by Mr. Cults, an alumnus of the institution. The subjects taken up were the purposes, prospects and needs of the university, and the bond of union existing between the alumni and the students. Prof. Scot Butler, President A. R. Benton, Rev. Wm. Mullender, agent for the cellege, Rev. E. W. Darst, of Boston, Howard Cale, Rev. L. L. Carpenter and Love H. considering the haste with which the programme was gotton up the meeting was very successful.

After this the regular assembly lecture was delivered by Rev. W. F. Richardson, of Michigan, on "The American Problem." It showed a wide range of reading and great depth of thought. We Americans, said Mr. Richardson, are now in the midst of an era of centennials, by means of which many of the great events of the country's early history have been recalled. Among these were the centennials of the Declaration of Independence, in 1876, the Yorktown celebration in 1881; that of the formation of the Markington's intended the American problem into its nature, history and probable final solution. In its nature it was greater than could be embraced in the mere securing of religious and civil liberty. This is essential, but not sufficient to the solution of the problem. The real source of American history is to be found in the desire of man for self-government, a far grander ideal than that of mere freedom from restraint. It demands nothing less than that the government be exercised in common by the whole people. Believing fully in their capacity of exercising the right of self-government, the revolutionary fathers were willing to hazard their lives in defending their right. The speaker then proceeded to give the history of the problem, beginning with the year 1770-in which the question was how to effectually establish self-government. He compared this development of the liberty idea in the people to the development of a child. The Nation mistreated the Indian and forgot the golden rule in its treatment of others, but finally the people remembered themselves, and then came the emancipation of the slave. At this time America took a long stride in the direction of self-government. He then instituted an injury into the material accidence of the slave. At this time America took a long stride in the direction of self-government. He then instituted an injury into the material accidence of the slave. At this time America took a long s selves, and then came the emancipation of the slave. At this time America took a long stride in the direction of self-government. He then instituted an inquiry into the material, social, political, intellectual and moral results of the century's development. Under the first head he recounted phenomenal increase in territory, wealth and population. Under the second head he said it is no wonder that with the opportunities afforded him the American youth may pass from the log cabin to the White House. America's great men and their descendants are rated only at what they are in and of themselves. As to intellectual and moral results the lecturer said that in no other land is there such a diffusion of knowledge as there is in America. Colleges, universities and schools everywhere afford a moderate education at least to everyone. The United States is the book market of the world—out of the 50,000 copies of the new edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica sold more than 40,000 were bought by people in this country. Infidelity has relatively decreased, while the church membership has been largely increased. Never before did Christianity have so strong a hold upon the best minds of the cultivated as it now has. But the ideal of self-government has not yet been reached. One element of the question is that of citizenship. It has been bestowed upon the negro, yet though the Constitution does not forbid it, woman is debarred from the right of suffrage. Every argument in favor of granting it has been more than satisfactory, yet the ballot has not been given to woman. The achievements of great women, and indeed of all women, whenever they have come in contact with their brethren have amply proven their ability to use the ballot.

Another question to be considered, he

Another question to be considered, he said, is that of immigration. In the in-fancy of the Republic immigration was enfancy of the Republic immigration was encouraged. For many years its perils were slow in developing. Had it been foreseen before the foreign vote had assumed so large a political significance, stronger safeguards would have been erected around the right of citizenship. It behoovs the Nation to attend promptly to the danger if it would secure beyond question the safety of American institutions. The chuch, too, must meet the immigrant as he touches the shores with a wholesome literature and a gospel in his migrant as he touches the shores with a wholesome literature and a gospel in his own tongue. A third question of vital importance is the preservation of the family as the basis of social life. Marriage and chastity must lie at the basis of society that is to be enduring. A fourth question is that of the relation between the capitalist and laborer. It is no longer a question between men having souls and sympathies, but between organizations both soulless and impassive. The sense of personality needs to be restored, and the fact recognized that the interests of workman and employer are indentical and not antagoistic. The capitalist needs to learn the principle of a righteous division of profits. A purification of political life is necessary, and, despite our discouragements, there is great promise of success in that direction, the lecture said.

The afternoon was devoted to a continu-the lecture said.

The afternoon was devoted to a continuation of the State Missionary Society's work. The officers of last year were relected, and Rev. J. P. Ewing was again chosen State missionary evangelist. In the evening Rev. D. R. Lucas preached on "Preaching the Christ." He said to preach Jesus is to preach a person, not a philosophy. That is the distinction between revelation and human philosophy. Philosophy deals with principles and revelation with personalities. Principles are only valuable in their relation to persons. Communion is only possible with personalities. To preach Jesus is to preach the resurrection, for Christianity hinges on that great fact. Every argument in favor of the immortality of the race, or any part of it, is equally in favor of the resurrection. Any attempt to re-cast Christianity, leaving out the res-

Interest in the Various Forms of Service Continues Unabated.

Yesterday was comparatively quiet at Acton, and as the weather was sultry during the earlier part of the day the crowd of visitors was not as large as usual. Among those who are here for work the cause continues with unabated interest. Rev. L. N. Pattison led the early prayer-meeting, but time had been spent in song, prayer and testimony, was turned into what might be termed a conversational gathering. Short talks by Dr. Keen, in answer to questions asked by the audience, touching detrinal points and the difficulties of Christian experience were given. They proved profitable. Chancellor Creighton, of the university at Lincoln, Nob., preached at 2:30 P. M. on "The Art of Saving Souls." He said that if he should choose a text it should be the following from Proverbs: "He that winneth souls is wise." Nobody, he said, should present the subject of saving souls but a teacher who has had large experience and seucess. All recognize the infinite value of souls and infinite care should be exercised by those who are to save them. There is a tendency of ministers, members and churches to relax at times on the subject of soul-saving. Especially is this true of past victories and renown and become formal. But existence for the mere sake of past victories and renown and become formal. But existence for the mere sake of existence is a failure. When a church gets to be self-supporting, rich and prosperous, when it arrives at a normal condition, the tendency is to settle down into carelessness. The necessity of the church is to be evangelical; to stand in the lead of the mighty procession to Calvary It requires as much power to keep a church in a soul-saving point, if the will must be personaded. There things, the claimed, must be done to save souls: First, the judgment must be convinced; second, the conscience aroused; third, the will must be persuaded. There things, he claimed, must be done to save souls: First, the judgment must be convinced; second, the conscience aroused; third, the will must be persuaded. All though the judgment be convinced and the conscience aroused, still the sonl is not a support of the conscience aroused; the will be supported by the soul is not a support of the conscience aroused; third, the will must be persuaded. All though the judgment be convinced and the conscience aroused, stil third, the will must be persuaded. Although the judgment be convinced and the conscience aroused, still the soul is not saved. Some preachers spend most of their work in convincing the judgment, throw in a trifle to rouse the conscience and expect conversions to follow. The fact is that the most of the sinners within the reach of the church of this country are orthodox sinners. They are already convinced of the truth, but their will is not persuaded. The will is invulnerable. Man is made to rise or fall as he will. While persuasion of the will is the supreme object to be sought.

KENTUCKY STOCK MEN.

They Visit the City and Will Take Away Good

Impressions of Hoosier Hospitality.

A delegation of Kentucky stock-raisers and shippers that arrived here Thursday afternoon put in the day yesterday at the stockyards, and visiting various places of interest about the city. "We represent four counties in Kentucky," said John W. Young, who was of the party, "Henderson, Union, Crittenden and Caldwell. We came on the Ohio Valley road to Evansville, from there to Terre Haute, and thence over the Vandalia to Indianapolis. The credit for this excursion is to be given to the railroads over which we have come, your commission men and your Union Stockyards Company, the object being to get our trade to come to this city. I do not mind saving we are favorably impressed with the advantages offered, as we visited the stockyards and noted the quantity and quality of stock handled here and were entertained at the hotel in good style. We took a trip on the Belt road, visited your magnificent State-house, saw the soldiers' mon-ument, the Cyclorama, and have, on the whole, had a thoroughly enjoyable time. We have not had any speeches made to us and have not made any. We are simply farmers and stockmen. Most of us have never been in Indianapolis before, but after this trip it is safe to say that probably all of us will be here again."

The party consisted of H. D. Barnett, R. H. Towery, M. H. Johnson, A. H. Radcliffe, R. N. Kevil, J. W. Hollingsworth, J. T. Darnell, Princeton; J. T. Woody, S. F. Crider, Marion; J. A. Kemp, Shady Grove; G. N. Martin, S. C. McGill, Jerry McGill, Sturgis; Henry Rehan, DeKoven; J. P. Reed, P. L. Reed, Fredonia; John W. Young, Alfred Johns, James Johns, G. M. Henshaw, H. R. Dyer, P. J. Stevens, Henshaw; W. J. Alvey, Peter R. Givens, James A. Wathen, Henry Hughes, James K. Waller, Thomas Young, Morgantield; James T. Hancock, Corydon; J. P. O'Daniel, Charles X. Buckman, John B. Yates, Waverly; C. D. McCormiek, Henderson.

The party left for their homes at 11 o'clock last night, and most of them will reach their destination at 1 P. M. to-day. They came and will return in a special car, furnished by the Ohio Valley road, under the conduct of Henry Hughes.

At night the pulpit was occupied by Mrs. L. O. Robinson. Her text was taken from Mark, viii, 36, "For what shall it profit a man if he gam the whole world and lose his own soul?" The American Nation, she said, figures largely on profit and loss, and everything, if possible, is turned to gain. Convince a man that he is now losing his capital invested, and that next year he will lose a greater per cent. and he will withdraw from the sinking concern. So it is with man every time and under every circumstance until his soul is reached. These men invest year after year, losing all the time, and more heavily each year. The altar service following the sermon resulted in a number of conversions.

To-morrow, at 5:45 A. M., the early prayermeeting will be led by A. A. Jones, and at 8 A. M. Rev. Charles Tinsley will lead the speaking meeting. Rev. J. W. Duncan will preach at 10 A. As soon as the identity of the gentleman had been established the convention unanimously voted him in as its candidate for Mayor. It was afterward learned that the Doctor recently moved to this city from Hamilton county. from Hamilton county.

Joseph Wells was unanimously nominated for city clerk.

At this part of the proceedings, through the indirect agency of John A. Pollock, ed-itor of the Indiana Phalanx, it was decided that the best way of conducting the local campaign would be to distribute copies of the Phalanx free throughout the city for the next two months. To further this scheme, money was asked for, and some was collected. When the cash resources failed, subscription blanks were passed around, and the people were gently reminded that "all could give a dollar, anyway, for the advancement of the cause." While this was being carried on, Luther Benson was called out, and for a quarter of an hour entertained his hearers with his reasons for voting the Prohibition with his reasons for voting the Prohibition ticket. After that the convention adjourned.
